2013 Summer Education Program

Dear Scott,

As you give thanks this week, please remember the lands that sustain us... the natural spaces and special places that we all love here in our mountain community. Be thankful for our purple mountain majesties, our crisp, clean rivers, our lush green meadows and our mighty national forests. Be thankful for our working farms and ranches that make our food. Be thankful for our land!

SUPPORT LOCAL LAND CONSERVATION!

Residents and visitors to the Rocky Mountain West come here for the spectacular vistas, beautiful forests, sparkling streams, endless skies and majestic mountains - scenes straight out of a glossy coffee-table book or a show on an outdoorsy cable channel. If we allow our community, especially our valley floor, to begin to look otherwise, then we have lost what it means to live in and visit the Central Rocky Mountains.

2013 Echo Day

If Eagle County, Colorado begins to look like anywhere or everywhere else, what will make it special to be here anymore? That is the mission of the Eagle Valley Land Trust on behalf of our community... to preserve the character of the Rocky Mountains through voluntary land conservation, one acre at a time. Together, we can conserve and protect the lands that sustain us. Please join the effort to preserve the unique natural character of our mountain community. You can make a difference and you can save local land!

An estimated 9 million cars per year (24,000 cars per day) drive through our beloved Red Canyon valley, enjoying the stunning views and awe-inspiring landscapes. The Land Trust and Eagle County Open Space Department are working to permanently preserve, and protect forever, the crimson cliffs, open meadows and natural spaces in Red Canyon. The Horn Ranch conservation project is underway to save Red Canyon and over a
